1 EXT. FERRY DOCK - NIGHT 1

Rain on the water. The last ferry to the mainland idles at the end of the dock, lights on, nobody aboard. JUNE CALDER, 30s, stands under the ticket awning holding a duffel bag that is not hers. NOAH PELL, 30s, walks up the ramp toward her, soaked.

JUNE
You forgot your bag.

NOAH
I didn't forget it.

JUNE
Then you're a very confusing person to say goodbye to.

NOAH
You said you weren't coming to the dock. I figured you'd come for the bag.

JUNE
I came for the bag.

A HORN from the ferry. Two short blasts. June does not look at it.

JUNE
That's the five minute one.

NOAH
I know what it is.

JUNE
(beat)
So go.

NOAH
Come with me.

JUNE
Noah.

NOAH
The job starts Monday. The apartment has two rooms. There's a whole city over there that doesn't know either of us.

JUNE
I like being someone here.

One long blast. The deckhand starts to pull the chain across the ramp. Noah looks at the ferry, then at her.

NOAH
Keep the bag.

JUNE
It's full of your socks.

NOAH
Then I'll have to come back for them.

He ducks under the chain and boards without the bag. The ramp lifts. June stays under the awning, the duffel against her chest, and watches the lights pull away.
